A combination of Japanese and Scandinavian design characteristics, "Japandi" style is minimalist yet inviting, sleek yet warm and functional. New York-based designer Tara Kantor employs a similar look in her tranquil, organic-modern interiors.

"I don't like my designs to feel overdone, so I try to achieve a minimal yet layered aesthetic in my projects that aligns with Japandi style," she says. "I am drawn to the balance between minimal and warm achieved by adding elements from nature, textures in material selections, and a curated collection of handmade ceramics." Here, Kantor shares seven furnishings inspired by the trending-yet-timeless approach.

"Fayette Studio is an excellent source for rugs with a modern organic feel. Their alpaca boucle rugs look and feel like slices of clouds. They also have a collection of felted wool rugs that are chunky and welcoming. Many of the rugs are customizable, so you can select the yarns and colors to make the designs work for the palette you are trying to achieve."
